Catalog Descriptions:

TPA 6950 (Graduate) Specialized practical experience achieved through participation in realized productions.

Enrollment in this course may be from 1-3 credit hours.

Students enrolled in this class shall be assigned positions of responsibility on school productions. These positions are to be of high levels of responsibility with advanced skill development for students with proper foundations already in place by previous coursework and production experience. The number of credits awarded are to be determined by the mentor or supervisor of the students particular assignment.

Goal: To provide intensive realized production experience on productions produced at the University of Florida. Through experiential learning, under the supervision of professional faculty and staff students will design, execute or operate complex operations of toady’s live performance under a learning environment that models the professional entertainment industry.

Method: This course is primarily intended for MFA students who are seeking professional careers. The assignment of a high level of responsibility offers students responsible/lead positions. The student assumes the role of a professional while operating under a simulated professional environment with commensurate expectations. Students are expected to operate with a strong sense of independence while making good use of all faculty and staff as a resource for developmental growth and advice for particular expertise.

Outcomes: Students shall develop advanced expertise in an area of specialty that directly contributes to the creation of live performance. The results of the students work shall be demonstrably illustrated by the substance of the live performance and shall be evaluated by both faculty, staff and the executive producer.
Processes:

- A short meeting will be held with the student to discuss the position, the number of credits to be awarded, and the expectations of the work. Discussed in more detail below.

- A postproduction conference shall be held after the production has closed to discuss the students work on the production.

- If the positions expectations are not defined in other documents the student and faculty should create a short document defining the expectations for that particular assignment.
